Sugar refining is in the hands of one factory, which supplies almost the entire consumption, estimated at over 30,000 tons per annum. This factory, which is at Rosario, I visited; it covers an extensive area, has complete railway connections, deep water frontage (where sea-going vessels discharge), and appears to be thoroughly equipped. The machinery is of diverse origin, having been bought wherever it was deemed most suitable. The principal motors, about 600 horse-power altogether, and boilers (10) are Swiss; a new large vacuum pan is German; new installation for revivifying animal charcoal is English, c.
