This insane ferocity, its great strength, and its habit of associating itself with its congeners in large and formidable bands, render it an object of great dread to the natives of Guinea, who, unless well-armed, and in large numbers, will never enter the forests frequented by the mandrill. THE AFRICAN BIRDS. Taking leave of the mammals of Africa, we come now to a brief review of some of its principal birds. One of the most characteristic of these is the Secretarybird, which derives its name from a fancied resemblance of its occipital crest of feathers to pens stuck behind a writer s ear. It is also, and more appropriately, known as the Serpent-eater. In the arid plains and dry thickets which...
