An excerpt from the beginning: THE PIONEER PERIOD: 1838-1863: PRIOR to the year 1838 the publishing center in the United States was at Hartford, Connecticut. At that time there were but three or four publishing firms that are now in existence Messrs. Harper and Brothers, the Appletons, William Wood and Company, among them. It was in that year (1838) that Mr. A. S. Barnes, then a young man of twenty-one, founded the house which bears his name. Previous to that he had been employed in the book store of D. F. Robinson and Co, in Hartford, in which city he began the business of book publishing in a store 12 x 20 feet. Mr. Barnes own narrative of the beginning of his business career in Robinsons Book Store, where his duties were those of the youngest clerk and his salary the munificent sum of 30 per year and his board, is interesting: I would open and sweep out the store before breakfast and remain until the next older came to relieve me. My next duty would be to go to the Post Office and get the mail, and then get my breakfast sometimes cold and sometimes hot and after family prayers, back again to the store, lay out orders, pack books, mark the packages and send them to the stage offices; generally I carried the packages, either on my back or in a wheelbarrow. We had no porters ; the boys did that kind of work. There were no railroads in those days, but steamboats to New York and Springfield were the water travel from Hartford, and stage coaches by land. I remember the first thing I did...
