It is well to call plants by their right names, even if the wrong ones be popular. The plants that will be referred to and which render gardens so attractive during the summer are familiarly known as Geraniums. With the object of making the matter clear to amateurs, it may be stated that every socalled Geranium that requires to be kept from frost is a Pelargonium, no matter what the colour of the flowers and foliage may be. True Geraniums are hardy border plants that pass the winter without any protection whatever. Pelargoniums are called Zonals because there is a more or less distinct horseshoe-shaped zone of colour in the leaf. In some it is very conspicuous indeed, constituting the chief attraction of the plants, notably in the variegated golden and silver tricolor and bicolor varieties, these terms signifying two and three colours in each leaf, as the case may be. Typical Sections.--There are different sections of Zonal Pelargoniums--namely, (1) green, (2) variegated, the latter being divided into golden and silver tricolors and bicolors, according as the prevailing leaf-colour may be yellow or white, and as to whether there are two other colours in the leaf or only one. If there is one distinct zone of colour only on a yellow or white ground, the variety is a bicolor; if there are red and green in addition to the ground colour, it is a tricolor. A person may obtain a representative plant of each...
