It must be remembered that the peculiarities resulting in cross-fertilization are the results of the inherent tendency in plants to vary coupled with the effect of the environment. Secondly, that these peculiarities are handed down through inheritance. Such being the case, we must not expect to find in the flower perfect adaptation in all respects to the visiting insect. The life of the plant is a series of adjustments. So far as we know, no plant is in perfect harmony with its surroundings. This being so, we are not surprised to find in our study of the interrelation of plants...
