Not illustrated. 1897 Excerpt: .is that compensation must be uniform and regulated by a general law. The officers of the General Electric Railway Company claim that the sections in the recent ordinances providing for compensation offend both the State and National Constitution. Relying on the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the Gulf Railway Company v. Ellis, filed January 18, 1887, they contend that the compensation clauses violate the first section of the fourteenth amendment, which declares that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. They also affirm that the Constitution of Illinois, in its provisions prohibiting special legislation and prescribing uniform taxation militate against the individual bargains insisted on by the city council. Apart, however, from this novel legal question, compensation that rests on pure guess-work will hardly be deemed more than a makeshift and temporary expedient. The city council is bound to go on increasing the tax, and each successive addition will be denounced by the companies as unfair and onerous. How far the city can go without discouraging the construction of new lines and the improvement of old ones, and without driving capital out of this line of investment is a question difficult to answer under existing arrangements, yet without such answer intelligent legislation is impossible. The public must no longer be kept in ignorance of the affairs and conditions of its corporate beneficiaries. Legislation must be based on facts and figures, not on...
