Give us light amid our darkness Let us know the good from ill; Hate us not for all our blindness, You can make us what you will. Mart Howitt. CHAPTER VI. SCHOOL DAYS. The blessings of her quiet life Fell on us like the dew, And good thoughts where her footsteps pressed Like fair blossoms grew. Whittier. CONJUGATE the verb to dance, Miss Bailey. Past participle, Miss Cowen Present Indicative, Miss Wray All the hot summer afternoon words like the above had been droned over. It was very hot in the schoolroom at the top of Madame Wrigleys school. The shrill voice of the head mistress was clear as ever, and the lower tones and guttural notes of the German Fraulein seemed unwearying. But the scholars appeared quite tired out. The little English pupil-teacher had her aching head propped on two ink-stained hands. The writing-class were sleepily copying pot-hooks and hair-strokes. The distant thump of a piano sounded like a lullaby. The buzz of a big blue-bottle added to the drowsy hum. Present Indicative, Miss Wray Our old acquaintance started. She was dreaming like Mother Nature herself, and had not heard the command. Miss Browne took up the question, and a hard-earned place was lost. Florence was almost glad of the change. The bottom of the form meant an angle to lean against, and she was very tired. Besides, the dunces seat enabled her to see the tops of the trees...
